

Executive Summary: UVA currently receives many donations from foreign countries from contracts and monetary gifts and is receiving about $22M. UVA's main giftors are from Bangladesh and Sweden with both over $4M. The gap between UVA and its peers is large and shows greatly in the sums each peer has more than UVA. UVA should try and receive gifts from Hong Kong, China, and France since they are lacking in any donations from them, and their peers seem to have high donations from them. Along with that, they should build up their relationship with Tanzania and Switzerland to earn more high donations.

Overall, UVA still receives many donations from different foreign countries. The country that constantly donates is England with small amounts each time. Their biggest donators seem to be Bangladesh and Sweden with no other country coming close to their numbers. Many foreign countries send mainly contracts with UVA and sometimes send monetary gifts. The giftors would bring UVA at 0.13% in the market share compared to other institutions.

For UVA to reach better sources of money, they should start reaching out to new foreign countries they haven't interacted with. These countries should be Hong Kong, China, and France. These countries have high counts of donations with UVA's peers and are shown to be in the top 5 donators for them with $458M, $296M, $191M. UVA appears to have 0 donations from any of them, and it will be a great contributor for them to build a relationship with them and start receiving high donations.

Along with UVA continuing to reach out to new countries, they should also focus on the relations they have as well. While Bangladesh and Sweden are UVA's top donators with 10 counts each, Tanzania and Switzerland seem to have better chances of donating more money. Tanzania and Switzerland are shown to have donated only 3 and 2 times but are the 3rd and 4th highest donator with $2.7M and $2M. Although UVA has great relations with England and England is shown to be a high donator with their peers, they have a high donation count with UVA, and it appears to be low donations. By building the relation with Tanzania and Switzerland, they can have high chances of receiving more high donations to be higher than Bangladesh and Sweden.

UVA has a great portfolio with many different foreign countries donating and bringing them to 0.13% in the market shares. Although donations and shares can be higher if they focus more on new and current relations. By building new relations they have more ways of receiving income, and focusing on current relations can help bring even higher donations from countries that haven't donated many times. By focusing on these two aspects, UVA will have a higher chance of improving their numbers and market shares.
